MAYOR'S OFFICE.

The re-establishment of the Mayor's Court, under the Marshal, has proved to be an immense benefit to many poor and unfriended people, and has saved the city large sums of money by evading expensive and protracted civil and criminal prosecutions in cases which have been decided by the Marshat with out expense to anybody except the maletactors. The week just past will compare favorably with any of its predecessors for amount and variety of business disposed of. A SMART LAWYER.

Under this heading, in the HERALD of Sunday last, was published the case of a lawyer, who was charged by a young woman who had been in his employ with attempting to defraud her out a large sum of money by means of a check on a bank from which he had overdrawn his account. He said he would pay the money, but not because he had been ordered to do so by the Marshal. He denied the right of the Marshal to dispense justice. This characteristic of denying seems to run in the family, for early in the week a brother of the individual alluded to was summoned by Marshal Tooker to answer a complaint of having obtained money from a young man for professional services and having performed no service in return therefor. The lawyers are members of the tribe of Levy and keep their offices near the City Hall Park. The complainant to the last mentioned case stated that he had given Mr. Levy twenty-five dollars, but that he (Mr. Levy) had done nothing for him. Mr. Levy in reply stated that he had never seen the complainant, to his knowledge, and had no recollection whatever of the affair. Marshal Tooker then requested that to kake the young man over to his office and let him see how the matter stood, show him whether anything had ever been done and settle the case with him. The lawyer demurred to this and the Marshal then suggested that he had open colook. The lawyer then started to leave, but suddenly remembered all about the case and what he had done in the premises. He stated that he had prepared papers and gone through certain forms; but the young man denied that anything had been done for him. He then commenced his brother's style, and questioned the Marshal had no authority in the matter whatever. The Marshal aked him if he ever heard of two eminent lawyers differing about the interpretation of a law. He told the genteman hurther that he might put any interpretation he pleased on the law, but he wanted him to appear before him. He understood the law, and was satisfied that the Marshal had no authority in the matter whatever. The Marshal had no authority in the matter whatever. The Marshal had no appear before him the next da by a young woman who had been in his employ with attempting to defraud her out a large sum of money under arrest or have him ejected from the office. The Marshal, however, contented himself with requesting the complainant to appear the next day, and advising the legal one to stay away if he deemed best, assuring him that he would see whether he would come or not. The complainant and defendant the left; but as the complainant and defendant the left; but as the complainant and defendant the left; but as the complainant and a stout office of the state of the defendant before him.

Of complaints against the keepers of Bodts Jewelary shore the cry is "still they come." The establishment at 119 Broadway, cards and circulars of which designate it as being kept by "J. Colemns & Co., sole agents for the oroide watch." The complaints against this infamous den have lately been quite anmerous, and give rise to the feat that business there must be quite lively. Yesterday a complainant appeared at the Marshal's desk, who stated that he had been fleeced out of $100 in gold at Colemns.' Officer Metirath was despatched with the complainant and he succeeded in having the money refunded. The keepers of a small jewelry gambling shop at 141 Chatham street were also obliged to refund a small amount which they had obtained from a stranger.

EXCHANGE AND PASSENGER TICKET OFFICES are brought into bad repute by the doings of the proprietors of a concern at 146 Liberty street. A few days ago an account was published in the heracle of a German who had been faceced by the brokers at 146 when about to sail for Europe last fall, and of his return and the recovery of his money for him. Yesterday a similar case was presented. Mr. Joseph Smith, of Yazoo, Miss., when about to leave for Europe, was induced to enter 146 for the purpose of procuring a passage tleket and having his money changed into English gold, for which a gave two drafts, one for $575, on Condit & Jenning, of 30 Brond street, and another for $209 50, on Mr. Swaine, of the Underwriters' Agency, 175 Broadway. The gentlemanly shopkeepers wrapped up the change in a belt for him, and he started for the old country. As soon as the steamer was on her way he examined the money and found that he had not more than the value of fifty dollars in half sovereigns. He made known his loss to the captain of the steamer and was allowed to return to the city on the pilot boat. Marshal Tooker, having heard the case, despatched officer McGrath to No. 146 Linerly street to have the money matter straightened, and officer Youry to the establishments upon which the drafts were made to notify them of the transaction and to stop the payment. Among the Miscklanneous Briskss disposed of were several cases of complaints made by poor sewing girls and other working people against their employers for attempting to defraud them of money justive earned. Vesterday morning no less than $222 were recovered for such complainants.

John Pardey, driver of express wagon No. 104, was charged with having failed to deliver Bity-four dolars which he had collected. The Marshal obliged him to make good the amount and heid the patter in abeyance for further disposation.

A TRANSACTION IN REAL ESTATE.

How Two Pressians Bought a Butcher Shop and How a Confiding Batcher Parted with His Shop and Money for Brooklyn Beal Estate. Two Prussians, giving their names as Albert Pri-truski and Otto Arno, according to afficavits made yesterday before Judge Dowling, at the Tombs, took yesterday before stude bowling, at the Tombs, took a shrewd, if not original, ceurse to raise some money. Calling upon Mr. Frederick Berkeleinann, at No. 81 Jackson street, who had advertised for sale his butcher shop at this place, they expressed a desire to purchase the same. Mr. Pritruski, the elder of the Prussians, represented himself to be John Sears, of South Brooklyn, and ouered in exchange for the butcher shop and $500 a lot of ground, on the corner of Van Brunt and Partition streets, North Brooklyn. A paper, purporting to be the deed of the lot, given by Mr. Kentler and Margaret, his wife, to John Sears, was shows. Mr. Renklemann, believing Mr. Pritruski to be Mr. Sears, and the deed to be genuine, and forther, being acquainted with the situation and value of the lot of ground in question, at once closed the bargain and paid fifty dollars to make it secure. On subsequent investigation he found he had been too hasty in binding the bargain, and the prospective good trade he had made was nothing more nor less than a swindling scheme, of which he was the unfortunate victim. He at once sought the arrest of the two Prussians and recovery of the money which he had been inveigled into giving them.

In addition to the affidavit of Mr. Berklemann setting forth the above facts. Mr. John Sears, of No. 214 Van Brunt street, made an affidavit that he was still the owner of the lot of ground in question; that he had not sold it to any one; and further, that he knew nothing of the way in which the accused parties became nossessed of the deed. Mr. William Kimtler also made a sworn statement that he sold this lot to Mr. Sears.

The prisoners, on the affidavits being read to them, denied being guilty of the charge preferred against them. They were each committed, in default of $1,600, to answer.

"King Kennedy" Klubbed-A Sensation at Police Headquarters.
During the past few weeks police headquarters has been the scene of several decided sensations, but yesterday an event occurred in the Mulberry street mansion which for a time created an immense exthe Central Office is aware, no doubt, that among other very commendable habits for which Superin-tendent Kennedy is particularly noted is that of early rising, and that he generally gets down to his office an hour or two before any of the other omeials have taken their breakfast. This may be a very good habit sometimes, but it certainly was not in the case of the unfortunate worm who got up so early one morning that the "early bird" gobbled him up before he could crawl into his hole, and Mr. Kennedy's habit was yesterday the indirect cause of his coming to sudden grief. Not that an "early bird" attempted to swallow him, for that would be certain death to any rara avis which might, could, would or should stomach such a dainty morsel; but that he came to grief is a fact, the truth of which he now feels with all its painfulness. At any rate had he not arrived at headquarters as soon as he did he might have escaped the adventure in which he became a very prominent actor.

It was about eight o'clock when Mr. Kennedy was sented at his desk writing—probably taking a few historical notes as to the origin of the Celuc race, for he is a wonderful authority on national origins, black, whire and otherwise. Suddenly the door of his secretary's office opened, and in strode a stout man in a rather seedy garb. He walked boldly into the room and was making his way towards Mr. Kennedy, when officer Webb—who happened to be at the time the only guardian of the Superintendent's peace and quietude—accosted him:—

"What do you want, sir?"

The stranger looked at Webb as though he would have awallowed him whole if that were possible, and abruptly replied:—
"I want to see Mr. Kennedy."

"I want to see Mr. Kennedy."

and abruptly replied:

"I want to see Mr. Kennedy."

"No, oh, no: just want to speak to him a word or two; that's all."

"Well, you can't see him."

"Can't see him? But I most. Business of importance, sir—of very great importance."

Now, Webb has a great fitting for inings of importance, and the announcement that the stranger was likely to communicate something astounding to the superintendent made him hesitate a little as to whether he would admit his interlocutor or not. But Webb is prudent withal, and so he went into Mr. Kennedy's room and told him that a man insisted upon seeing him.

"Show him in," growled the Superintendent, and apparently quite willing to meet the porsistent individual half way, he rose from his seat and walked to the middle of the room.

The stranger advanced toward him slowly, as though he intended to be very courteous and desired to obtain some favor at the hands of the Chief, but just as he got within arm's distance of the Superintendent, with the rapidity of thought he drew forth a club from his arm sleeve and made a terrific blow at Mr. Kennedy's head, Although not an "Artful Dodger" in or outside of any "ring," the Superintendent dodged, and the blow that was intended to give him a very bad headache felt with a resounding whack on his shoulder. In another mistant Webb had the stranger by the throat begging for mercy, and the Superintendent, after satisfying himself that no bones had been broken that belonged to his body, sat down to his writing.

When the man was placed in a cell it was ascer-and the superintentient, after satisfying missel canano bones had been broken that belonged to his body, sat down to his writing.

When the man was placed in a cell it was ascertained that his name was Thomas Haughton and that he had been a member of the police force, from which he was dismissed on the 3d of September, 1867. On being taken before Justice Dowling, at the Tombs, he was committed in default of $500 bail.
He endeavored while in court to explain how Mr.
Kennedy was the worst enemy he had, and all that sort of thing, how sorry he was to have done what he had done, but the Justice was not in a humor to listen to his harangues and so he went down to a dungeon. Some people suppose that the ex-policeman only attempted to club the Superintendent from force of police hadit, which seems to tolerate the clubbing of any citizen who may not agree with the M. P.'s in all things, spiritual and otherwise.
The supposition, however, is rather an uncharitable
one.

A MYSTERY CLEARED UP.

The Suspicious Death of Mrs. Clark-State ment of Dr. Sears. Further light was yesterday thrown upon the case of Mrs. Mary Ann Dorr Clark, who recently died at her late residence, 344 West Fifty-first street, under circumstances which aroused suspicion in the mind of her sister that poison was the cause of death. Dr. Harris, of the Board of Health, reported the case to Coroner Flynn as a proper one for investigation.

Dennty Coroner Shine accordingly weited the medical gentlemen who attended upon deceased in her last sickness, and after conversing with them became convinced that the deceased lady had received the proper medical treatment and that there had been no irregularity or neglect of duty on the part of the doctors or any one else, and that her death was the result of natural causes.

In order to fully convince the authorities and all concerned that Mrs. Clark had not been poisoned Dr. Sears submitted the following report concerning her sickness and death:—

James McLoughlin, Michael Malcolm and Thomas Gaivin, all New Yorkers, were brought before Recorder Aldridge yesterday morning on the charge of attacking officer McDowell and rescuing one of their number who was under arrest for assaulting one Charles Morgan. Other police officers came up and secured the gang, but they fought desperately on the way to prison. The first two were committed for trial; the others were flued five dollars each. EXTRAORDINARY VERDICE-THE JURY REBUKED.

The trial of David A. Eisenbaum on a charge of threatening to shoot John Burke with a pistol at Hoboken, resulted in a verdict of acquittal, but the jury requested the Court to reprimand the prisoner for his offence and admonish him against carrying concealed weapons in future. The judges were perfectly astounded at the verdict, and after a few moments in consultation the following remarks were addressed by Judge Randolph to the prisoner:—"David, by some unaccountable circumstances you are declared not guilty. You are a fortunate man. You presented the pistol, and it would seem from the evideace that you intended to shoot Mr. Burke. It was contrary to law to act as you have done, and if the jury had acted differently—as they strictly might have done—you would have been sent to the State Prison." The prisoner will be brought up for trial on another indictment. The verdict of this jury is not such a matter for wonder after all to those who neard the verdict of acquittal last week in the case of a man indicted for blowing up a safe in Hoboken during the night, but the jury regarded him as an innocent man because no one saw him actually place the powder in the safe, though every other point was satisfactorily established. The prisoner was greeted on his release to had on the Pirst ward of New York. Judge Randolph struck several jurors of the panel on Thursday. The least that can be said of some of these juries is that they are a disgrace to Hudson county. Hoboken, resulted in a verdict of acquittal, but the UNPLEASANT TERMINATION OF AN ELOPEMENT. Acting on instructions received by telegraph from Harrisburg, Pa., the Chief of Police of this city on Friday evening arrested a man named Andrew Groves, and a female rejoicing in the cognomen of Rebecca Gillen, on a charge of having eloped from that place recently. It is represented that fars. Gil-len had a husband and children in Harrisourg, but she protested against ever living with him again, Groves confesses to have been incited to the rash act by the seductive influence of his fair inauorata. Both partles are locked up to await a requisition for their removal from the Governor of Pennsylvania.

The man, who ft appears was engaged in unloading lumber at Mott liaven, was seen to cross over from that place and station himself on the bridge, which was then being opened to admit a vessel. Finding himself in the centre of the river, and perhaps thirty iest above the water, he removed his hat and leaped down. On rising to the surface he attempted to keep afloat, but sunk, when a rowboat lom the shore put off and rescuted him in a sensilest condition. A COOL PROCEEDING .- On Friday evening the mar Downs, who accompanied Mrs. Andrews in her flight from the Rosendaic Hotel, on hearing that the Grand Jury had indicted her as accessory to the murder of Corwin, returned to the scene of the homicide with wagons and removed a quantity of furniture from the house during the night. Yesterday he again made his appearance and caused to be conveyed away for its owner whatever remained that was of value. This finished, the house was locked up and deserted. It is not too much to assert that this almost unprecedented contempt for the action of the Grand Jury has been permitted through derellection of duty on the part of the authorities. Both the fielding and the bowling were remarkably good on both sides, the fielding of the single men being especially noticeable. The highest single score was 17, made by Mr. Moore. THE NAVAL ACADEMY.

Continuation of the Examination-Practical Exercises in Steam Engineering-Completeness of the Steam Department-Arrival of Scnor Ruiz.

ANNAPOLIS, Ma., May 27, 1869. Annapolis, Md., May 27, 1869.

The Board of Visitors at eleven o'clock this morning resumed their labors, confining their attention to an oral examination of portions of the first and second classes. The subjects taken up were navigation and philosophy in the first class and French in the second. The examination was highly satisfactory to every member of the board. In navigation the midshipmen of the first class received a searching examination, covering the whole theory of sating, taking directions, latitude, longitude and every other branch of the complicated science.

Having shown themselves proficient in traversing the high seas, the midshipmen displayed to the board that they were equally expert in navigating the intricate windings of philosophy. Prom the hard facts of nautical problems they were now brought face to face with the solid teachings of Plato and Aristotle, the erudition of Bacon and his age of thinkers, and the incomprehensible logic and sense-less propositions of the piratical philosophers of to-day. The time passed in this examination was highly interesting. The "middles," like philosophers, demeaned themselves in true ph

The examination of the second class in French was conducted entirely in that language. Not an American word was spoken during the exercises, all questions being asked in French and answered an questions being asked in French and answered in the same diction. The talent for language in the different members of the class was very striking. While some hesitated to redect upon the modes of expression, others ratified of their answers as fluently as if they were using their mother tongue. There was not a member of the class, however, who could not make a respectable appearance should ne be dropped into the midst of the Freinch empire—Paris, for instance. This afternoon the Board of Visitors were present at the "steam building" set apart for practical instruction in steam and machinery, to witness the examination of the first class in this important branch of a modern naval education. The arrangements for pursuing tals study are of the most perfect description. Chief Engineer Thomas Williamson, in charge, has already succeeded in bringing this department into a condition of efficiency second to no other at the academy, or probably is the world. In the main hall, painted on blackboards around the walls, are drawings of all varieties of marine engines and longitudinal and transverse sections of ships, showing the machinery and different portions of naval vessels of all descriptions. Around the room sre a number of sectional working models of the various parts of an engine; also a six horse power marine engine, with glass cylinder beads, valve chest and air pump bonners. There are also several models of beam engines in wood. In the details of machinery a collection of propellers of different inventions and other detached portions of engines has been gathered for the convenience of practical studies.

In the adjoining room is a full sized marine engine and bollers of the same pattern as used in the Swatara, set up as if in a ship.

The class to-day was examined under the supervision of Chief Engineer Thomas Williamson and assistants, First Assistant Engineers L. J. Alfen, E. B. Latch and C. E. De Vine and Second Assistant Engineer J. C. Kare. Upon the arrival of the Board of Visitors the midshipmen who were in the same diction. The talent for language in the different members of the class was very strikof the board. After passing four hours in testing the skill of the class the midshipmen were dismissed.

There appears to be but one thing lacking in order to make the department perfect in all its details, and that is a suitable text book. The work at present used is by an English author, and is defective in many respects. In the details, the work treats upon English marine engines, and is deficient in the numerous improvements adapted by American ingenity and skill. It is the intention of the Board of Visitors to recommend that the Navy Department make some arrangements by which a thoroughly American work, by an American author, may be adopted in place of the present book in use.

There are still several of the practical exercises unfinished, the handling of spars, fencing and management of boats. The club races and base bail matches are also to come off. The haste now is to complete the oral examinations in order to afford ample time for these.

Señop Ruiz, representative of the Cuban patriotic government, arrived here this evening and will remain several days in looking into our system of naval instruction. Unless his duties call him back to Washington he will attend the ball to be sgiven at the Academy next week.

Finish the Oral and Written Studies—Arrival of the Frigate Savannah—The Practice Squadron—List of Officers—The "Middles" to Act as Sallors—Arrival of Candidates for Admission to the Academy.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., May 28, 1869.

The cold. drizzling weather which has visited this vicinity for the past two days has put a stop for the present to the outdoor exercises. Advantage has taken of the opportunity thus presented to push forward the oral and written examinations so as to leave a clear field next week in which to complete the practical studies, as well as to have a test of skill on the part of the rival boat and base ball This morning the Board of Visitors attended the examinations in the unfinished branches of naviga-tion, astronomy and political science.

This afternoon the board, notwithstanding the weather, performed their usual practical exercises over an elegant dinner prepared by the inimitable Sam, chef decuisine. It is intended to-day to make out a list of the "deficients," or those midshipmen who have failed to pass the requisite test of proficiency. This list will be submitted to the Academic Board, and each case will be considered separately. the usual practice to give the unfortunate mid-shipmen another chance by putting them through the entire course before a board of seven officers. If they again fail their cases are again considered If they again fall their cases are again considered by the Academic Board and it is either recommended to set the midshipmen back a year or their resignations are requested. The action of the board is referred to the Secretary of the Nayy, who usually adopts their suggestions. It is not yet known how many will be piaced in this predicament of anxiety and uncertainty.

The frigate Savannah, which has been at Norfolk for some days undergoing repairs, arrived here this morning, and anchored off the Academy. The vessel was towed up the bay by a steam tug yesterday. When about fifteen miles below this point she ran aground, which delayed her arrival until this morning. The ship is in excellent condition for the cruise, having received a complete overhauling.

The officers assigned to duty with the cruising squadron, which will leave here between the 8th and 10th of June, are now reporting daily. Active preparations are going on in view of a speedy departure. Most of the officers who have here living on shore have already taken possession of their quarters on the ships.

I give below the vessels which will compose the practice squadron, and the officers who have already been assigned to them and have reported to Capitain Harrison, who will command the fleet.

REAL ESTATE MATTERS.

The week just closed must, to some extent, be regarded as an exceptional one, as although we have been gradually approaching a period of exceeding dulness, still in view of the many announcements for sales next week and succeeding of dearth of transactions this week cannot be p wholly to the termination of the season so-called although the period of complete inactivity which usually intervenes between the two great seasons of auction sales—the spring and fall—is near. The auction sales—the spring and fall—is near. The principal business during the summer is in suburban property, which so far this year sold well, at high figures, but not rapidly or with any appearance of undne speculative appreciation. Whether it will so continue is a problem about as difficult of solution as how long the present high prices in stocks will prevail. There are a great many who say that there must be a break, but in the majority of cases they can give but insunicient reasons for the faith that is in them.

One of the largest transactions in Westchester county property this year occurred this week, being the purpose by Christian Schaefer, of this city, at private sale, of the property at Melrose known as Karl's Germania Park, for $110,000.

The Mutuals, by their gentlemanty bearing and sourtsous manners, both on and off the ball field, won noss of friends among the frateristy of the Hub, and they may always count on a hearty greeting at their hands whenever they may see fit to repeat their visit. Many have supposed that a professional ball club. like the Mutuals must necessarily be made up more or less of persons of a rough character. Especially has this been the case in Boston, and the visit of the Mutual Club will therefore go far in establishing a better reputation for professional clubs in this section.

What has become of the Dauntless Club? They have not been heard of since they were double banked by the Park Bank folks.
